LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION

To Whom It May Concern:

I am an attorney, college lecturer, and the founder of a start-up company called Jamiez. I had the pleasure of hiring and working with Dillon Tadeo during the summer of 2025 as we prepared to launch our app-enabled service company. Over that time, I was able to observe some key traits and characteristics that I recognize as both admirable and valuable, which lead me to strongly recommend Dillon Tadeo for a position with your organization.

I hired a team of interns to help me conduct some research and analysis, as well as help me to develop an app that would complement our offering. Dillon was a key contributor on both projects. In the analysis project, he independently produced a comprehensive financial expansion model that considered several creative dimensions for determining optimal growth paths for our company. As is helpful in the capital fundraising context, he transformed that data into meaningful insight about the potential future value of the company. I have no doubt that his ability to model and synthesize data into actionable information would be a difference-maker for even much larger and much more complex businesses than Jamiez.

In our app project, Dillon was similarly impressive, this time demonstrating his strong teamwork skills. I grouped Dillon with several other Computer Science majors to develop the app from a wireframe. Dillon was responsible for designing and coding both the frontend UI/UX and the backend logic such that the app's core features (profile, order, and scheduling management) were delivered on-time, functional, and professionally and elegantly coded. He proved a strong developer and exhibited great proficiency in the tools used to build the app: Python, SQL, Excel, Supabase, and React Native. His technical strength also allowed him to support his team members with their project elements. In any organization where high technical complexity meets the need to collaborate effectively with teams, Dillon would be a fantastic addition.

The summer 2025 intern class was filled with students with strong academic credentials, and Dillon Tadeo was still able to shine through as someone with a mature business sense, strong self-discipline, and a capacity for big challenges. I know that he has a bright future because he has built a strong foundation of both technical and personal skills. He would be a standout contributor to any high-performing team. I could not more enthusiastically endorse and recommend Dillon Tadeo as a great fit for your business; he has already had a significant impact on mine.

If you would like to chat about Dillon further, please feel free to contact me at sseidler@jamiez.com or (408) 646-0414. I would be happy to elaborate further on my time working with him.

Sincerely,
Simon Seidler, Esq.
